Diana joined the firm in 2013 and currently leads the practice in Foreign Trade, Customs Law, and International Exchange Regulations.

She is an attorney from the Universidad del Norte, with a specialization in Customs Law from the Universidad Externado de Colombia, and is a candidate for a Master's degree from the University of London (International Program).

Diana has worked in the Customs and Foreign Trade departments of two of the "Big Four" firms and has extensive experience advising major companies across all sectors of the economy, structuring transactions in customs, foreign trade, and international exchange regulations. She was part of the team that secured the imposition of anti-dumping duties on cylindrical metal drums originating from the Republic of Chile.

She has over 15 years of experience providing advice on compliance with customs regulations in foreign trade and exchange operations, World Trade Organization legislation, trade defense measures, mechanisms to promote foreign trade, customs benefits, customs and exchange litigation, actions before the Customs Administration, international investments, and external borrowings.
